TOM HORN'S DAYS

Roy Rawlings Tells the Officers He Was Hired to Kill Lincoln I. Morrison.

CATTLEMAN OFFERED HIM $600

After the Shooting He Refused to Pay The Money-Prisoner Feigning Insanity.

(Special to the "News.") Red Lodge, Mont., Aug. 5 .- Roy Rawlings, who was arrested here for shooting Lincoln J. Morrison, a prominent sheepman of Wyoming, has told the officers several different stories of the crime. It is believed he is now trying to create the impression that he is in-

Upon the arrival here of under-Sheriff Felix Alston of Big Horn county, who, with a number of officers, visited Roy Rawlings in his cell, he again confessed to participating in the Wyoming erime. He tells how he and three others shot Lincoln J. Morison, a promitent sheepman, from the brush, staying at the ranch of a cattleman who hired him to do the deed, and then fied in the morning on horses furnished by the morning on horses furnished by the cowman, who, at last refused to pay them the $600 apiece he had promised, but told them if they did not clear out that he would blow their brains out. Then Rawlings said they rode to a cer-tain place near the Burlington, turned their horses loose, threw their guns into a creek and rode in a box car to Billings, where Rawlings himself hired out to Rudolph Madsen, the Blue Water rancher, who arrested him on Monday after hearing the man talk in his sleep, but again this afternoon Rawlings con-tradicted that story in which he had even detailed the cowman's appearance and described his family and brand. His latest declaration is that he learned all the details of the crime he has been telling from four men he met at Bridger, who gave him $800 in cash to say he committed the crime.

Morrison, the man shot, subsequently recovered, but his mother has a standing reward of $3,500 for the arrest and conviction of his assailants. Sheriff Potter wired the postmaster at Wiggins, Colo., today in order to learn something of Rawlings as he claims his home is a few miles from Wiggins.

ABOUT UTAH FRUIT.

California Expert Finds That it is Not As Good as in Pioneer Days.

In an interview with John Isaacs, secretary to the state horticultural commissioner, regarding his recent trip to Salt Lake City, he said to the Sacramento

"I took advantage of a short vacation allowed me from the office to look over conditions in Utah, and in this I combined business with pleasure by examining into the fruit conditions in that

"In the early days the Mormons were celebrated for the variety and superior quality of fruits raised in Utah, and they made a business of importing va-"In the early days the Mormons were celebrated for the variety and superior quality of fruits raised in Utah, and they made a business of importing varieties from all over the world, their missionaries being instructed to bring seeds, plants and cuttings from whatever part of the world they were operating in, upon their return to Salt Lake. As a consequence in early days Salt Lake was really a large experimental station, and some very line fruits were produced there.

"The climate, of course, militates against their producing as large a range of varieties as we have in California, but as many of these as were suited to the climate and altitude were very efficient.

"Of late, however, horticulture seems to have been very much neglected and mining has become the one industry of the state, to which all others are subordinated. As a consequence of this neglect, Utah fruit has deteriorated very much. Very little, if any, is exported, and the people of Salt Lake secure their supply largely from California.

"Some little effort is being made to keep down destructive insects and the work is in the hands of a very efficient man, a Mr. Sorenson, but the means placed at his disposal for handling so wide a territory are not adequate for his requirements, and as a result very many of the orchards are-in bad condition.

"The codling moth and the woolly aphis are rampant in many of the apple and pear orchards, and in Salt Lake ipicked a great many specimens of these fruits and found none that were without worms. The eastern peach root, a pest which is not found in California, is established there, but outside of this I found no pest which does not exist here.

"Salt Lake has made a most remarkable growth during the past few years, and is now one of the finest cities on the Pacific coast. The city is laid out at right angles, while rows of large shade trees grow on either side of the streets streams are diverted and are not as numerous as they were in early days, when nearly every street had a running stream at the edge of eac joining lands.

"The weather during my visit was exceedingly pleasant, and I was struck by the air of thrift and business of the city. Buildings are going up in all directions, many of which would give credit to San Francisco itself."

LOST NO TIME.

Alfred D. Tobin Divorced One Day and Wed the Next.

Late Wednesday afternoon Alfred D. Tobin, a well known young business man of this city, was granted a divorce from his wife on the ground of desertion. That same evening he appeared at the county clerk's office with Miss Emma Mae Sanderson, a popular young lady, and received a license to wed. The marriage was solemnized at noon yesterday in the Phillips Congregational church, Rev. P. A. Simpkin officiating, and after a wedding breakfast, at which only the immediate relations. which only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties were present, the couple left for a three weeks' wedding trip, the tour to include a visit to the world's fair.

ENRICHING POOR SOIL. Cheap Rates to Boston

The soil is the greatest source of the ealth, comfort and also of the luxuries hat man enjoys. Most of his food comthat man enjoys. Most of his food comes from it directly and the rest of it indirectly, except that which comes from the water. So does his clothing and most of the beautiful things that add to life's pleasures. It is the medium through which he receives from the hand of his Creator and Provider almost everything good. The sunshine and the rain give him their blessings through it. The air also does so in part. The solid earth yields up her treasures in large measure through the soil; for the rocks are decomposed and their mineral salts become a part of the active agents in plant growth.

We may very properly ask ourselves.

from his big pipe and finally said:
"Vell, Shon, I guess you pette gon-sider yourself dead."—Youth's Compan-

We may very properly ask ourselves, what is the soil? Of what is it composed and how is it made? Are the soils with which we are working shitable to our purposes or sot. That is, are they rich or poor, as we would rate them? If they are not, then how shall we make them so?

are not, then how shall we make them so?

The soil is not a dead, inert mass of clay and sand, which are the residue of True enough, it is largely composed of rocks that have been reduced to powder rocks that have been reduced to powder and meal by the action of the forces of nature in bygone ages; and at the present day they are still at work as busily as ever. Within these rocks there was stored many elements, which when released from their primary condition, if we knew what that condition was, and mixed or combined with each other and with other elements become a part of the food of plants that have their home in and upon the soil. However, some of these mineral plant foods are also stored in vast beds in the earth in much more than ordinary proportions, as every intelligent cultivator of the soil now knows, and of which he wisely takes advantage when necessary.

In addition to minerals there are or-cultivator of the soil now knows, and of which he wisely takes advantage when necessary.

In addition to minerals there are organic substances in the form of decayed and decaying vegetable and animal matter, that form an important part of the soil. They are in a most readily obtainable condition for plant food. They are to plants like milk is to the animal world, being not only rich in plant food but in very digestible forms.

Besides the inanimate parts of the soil there are myriads of bacterial ferments and other microscopic organisms that have their home in it and assist in performing certain work that is of the most useful character in plant growth.

A rich or fertile soil is, therefore, a mixture of inorganic matter and of dead, dying and living organic matter. In what state our particular soils may be that we have to deal with, for the production of this, that or the other crop that we may be growing is something that we may be growing is something that we must know if we are to obtain the best results. How shall we know? Shall we call in the chemist to tell us? That may be necessary in some cases, but we can usually get better answers from the crops themselves. Experience will guide us and this experience is best had by carefully noticing how things grow under different treatment as to thiage and manuring. The farmer and horticilturist have serious and complicated problems before them, and it becomes them to apply their best endeavors to their solution. ply their best endeavors to their solution They will never be fully solved, even in one particular case, but they may be in sufficient degree to answer all practica nurroses purposes.

If we have poor soils we usually know it. The crops have told us so. They may be unproductive in their present conditions, but there may be within them some of the elements of fertility in ample measure. Others may have their plant foods largely in latent or unavailable forms. There may be lack of humus, which we are getting to know more and more is of the utmost importance. We may be negligent or ignorant in the matter of proper tillage. Soil moisture may be insufficient, especially at the critical periods. We may be growing the wrong crops. All these things must be understood theoretically and the grower able to apply his knowlede to the cases in apply his knoweige to the cases in

First. let the right crop be grown. Consult the neighbors and the literature on that pardeular subject. Keep your eyes open and all the other senses acute. If something fundament is wrong never rest until you know why that crop does not prosper. He sure to keep the soil full of humus. No sort of crop will do much that cannot put its feeders into a bed of decaying organic matter. It not only has-food in it, but it holds moisture like a sponge. It is to a plant, like bread and milk to a hungry child. If the moisture is not there it is largely your fault, even in a dry time. In the arid regions the grower will provide tripation or pay the penalty of his own negligence, or possibly, his misfortune. In the rainy sections there is much less excuse. Nature usually provides water enough from above to carry the crops throughout their periods of growth. It is our duty to conserve it. If we have the soil in a porous condition, and not besren or humus and compact and hard from lack of ample and timely stirring, it will absorb the rain and melted snows when they come. Moisture dissolves the available plant food in the soil and helps in the dissolution or unlocking of that which is not available.

The lending principle in and service of good tilings is the conservation of moisture in that part of the soil lying below the immediate surface. The finer and dryer the first two or three inches is made the moister will be that below. It is highly important that this truth be well understood, firmly fixed in the mind and practised most thoroughly. It will do more to help overcome the common troubles of the tiller of the soil than any one tiling that I can mention.

The growing of "soiling" crops is a great benefit to any poor soil, whether it be sandy or stiff clay. There are several classes of such crops, of which the legumes are the most useful, but almost anything that will grow, even weed, and that is then allowed to rot on top or is worked into the soil help it materially. Stable manure is one of the best things for soil inspr
